Administrative Information

Biographical Sketch

Tehilla Lichtenstein was born in Jerusalem, Palestine in 1893, the daughter of Hava (Cohen) and Rabbi Haim Hirshenson. She earned her B.A. degree from Hunter College and M.A. degree from Columbia University.

Her husband, Rabbi Morris Lichtenstein, (1889-1938), founded the Jewish Science Movement in 1921. Jewish Science originated as a response to Mary Baker Eddy's Christian Science Movement which, Lichtenstein felt, was making great inroads into the American Jewish Community. With the death of her husband in 1938, Ms. Lichtenstein took over the leadership of the movement, becoming editor of the Jewish Science Interpreter and head of the Congregation of Jewish Science in New York City.

Jewish Science emphasized the spiritual aspects of Judaism as well as the goodness of God and the effectiveness of prayer. The Movement's primary concern was to harmonize Judaism with modern science (notably medicine and psychology) through a program of meditation and prayer which would reveal Judaism (stripped of any historical vestiges) to be the highest of healing sciences. Tehilla Lichtenstein taught that prayer linked people to God and that that link supported the power of positive thinking, essential to psychological and physical well-being.

Tehilla Lichtenstein died in 1973.
