Administrative Information

Biographical Sketch

James Marshall was born in New York City in 1896 to Louis and Florence (Lowenstein) Marshall. Like his father, James Marshall pursued and achieved a distinguished career in law. He studied at the Columbia School of Journalism (1913-1916) and, following a year as second lieutenant in the Army, received the LL.B from Columbia in 1920.

In the practice of law, James Marshall's primary concern was with civil liberties, and his sphere of interests ranged from helping European immigrants to attacking discriminatory practices among major corporations. His professional and philanthropic interests led to a simultaneous practice in two separate law firms along with involvement in numerous associations in the public sector.

While Marshall functioned successfully as arbiter, administrator, educator and author, the complete history of his activities is beyond the scope of this sketch. The following listing, however, is representative of his interests.

Marshall lectured in public administration at New York University from 1953-1959. He was later instrumental in establishing the Human Relations Center at Boston University (1966-1970). As lawyer and statesman, Marshall was involved with the New York Board of Education (1938-1942), the New York City Charter Commission, the American Jewish Committee (Vice President 1959-1962; honorary Vice President 1962-1986), the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee, the Institute of International Education, the Jewish Publication Society, the American Association for an International Office of Education (Vice-President 1943-1947), the Wilderness Society and the NAACP. Marshall was an integral part of the U.S. Commission for UNESCO, and traveled as a U.S. delegate to conferences in Paris (1946), Mexico City (1947), Florence (1950) and Geneva (1959). He was sympathetic to and actively involved in the development of the Ihud Association under the direction of his uncle, Judah Magnes.

Marshall served on the board of directors of the New York State Training School for Boys (President 1934-1935), the Hebrew University, the Martha Graham Center for Contemporary Dance, the P.E.N. American Center and the Robert Marshall Civil Liberties Trust. This last position indicates Marshall's strong sense of family ties. Along with active participation in administering funds from the Trust, established by the estate of a late brother, Marshall instigated the research for the publication of a biography of his father, Louis Marshall: Champion of Liberty. Marshall was also interested in another family project, that concerning the Florence Marshall Memorial Fund.

James Marshall was honored many times for these and other activities. He received awards for distinguished public service from the Educators Lodge B'nai B'rith (1946), distinguished service to New York schools from the Public Education Association (1952) and for public service in the New York region from the American Veterans Committee (1952).

Another aspect of James Marshall's career was the publication of both popular and professional literature. He authored several books: Ordeal by Glory (1927), Swords and Symbols: The Techniques of Sovereignty (1939, revised 1969), The Freedom to be Free (1943), Law and Psychology in Conflict (1966, revised 1971), and Intention in Law and Society (1968).

James Marshall was married for 52 years to Lenore K. Guinzburg (d. 1971) and had two children, Ellen F. Scholle and Jonathan. In 1974, he married Eva Garson Levy. James Marshall died at the age of 90 on August 11, 1986 in New York City.

Scope and Content	The collection describes the career of James Marshall, lawyer, leading member of the American Jewish Committee, and active participant in the field of education. The collection consists mainly of correspondence, but also includes addresses and writings of Marshall and information on the Marshall family.
