Administrative Information

Biographical Sketch The Olin-Sang-Ruby Union Institute (OSRUI) was founded in 1952 at Oconomowoc, Wisconsin. It was the first permanent Reform camp in North America. Jewish camps had, up to that time, been mainly concerned with the Americanization of immigrant children.

By the 1940s, however, there were so few recent immigrants requiring this Americanization that a change was needed in the format of the camps. Rabbi Herman E. Schaalman, the director of the Chicago Federation of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations (UAHC) in 1949 set out to construct a Jewish camp much in the style of the Jewish Boy Scouts in Germany and also like many of the Christian summer camps in the United States. With the assistance of several rabbis and members of the UAHC board Schaalman was able to realize his goals. Rabbi Ernst M. Lorge assisted Schaalman using the Labor Day Weekend Institutes by the Chicago Federation of Temple Youth as an example.

With the aid of Johann S. Ackerman, Sidney I. Cole, Rabbi Joseph Strauss, Rabbi Karl Weiner, Bernard Sang, and Sidney Robinson, among many others, they were able to purchase land for this camp. The land around the Briar Lodge in Oconomowoc, Wisconsin was chosen for its close proximity to Chicago and affordable price. (The Briar Lodge had been a private Jewish camp beforehand.) After the camp opened Schaalman gave the UAHC the deed to the camp.

In 1952 the camp opened with 39 high school students. The founders of the camp wanted a place where Jewish children could live and learn about Judaism in a relaxed atmosphere that would cultivate a love for Jewish knowledge. Schaalman's motto for the camp was, "study, pray, work, play". Dan Kerman became the new director of the camp after Schaalman stepped down. The emphasis on education did not change however. With an initial staff almost entirely comprised of rabbis, a mood was set in which Judaism enveloped all aspects of the camp whether with songs, study, games, or food preparation. As the years progressed the camp offered many different sessions ranging from Torah study to Kibbutz HaTzofim where the children were taught to apply Judaism to all aspects of life. There were also many retreats for adults, families, congregations, parents, and teachers. OSRUI continues to offer many sessions for each new generation that attends.

Scope and Content The Olin-Sang-Ruby Union Institute collection contains camp materials such as promotional information sent to Reform congregations and other administrative papers. The majority of the collection consists of material from the various sessions held at the camp over the years as well as some photographs of the campers and the camp grounds.

Arrangement Organized into two (2) series: A. Administrative; B. Camp Sessions Material.

Terms of Access The collection is open for use; no restrictions apply.
