Biographical Sketch

Werner Weinberg was born 30 May 1915 in Rheda (in Westphalia, Germany) to Elias and Paula Weinberg. Because universities were closed to new Jewish students when Weinberg graduated from high school in 1934, he attended the orthodox Israelitische Lehrerbildungsanstalt in Wuerzberg, and obtained certificates for public school elementary and religious school teaching. He taught first in Rheda, then at the Judische Volksschule in Hannover, acting as the unofficial cantor and rabbi for the rural community.

In 1939, the Weinbergs emigrated to Holland, where Weinberg worked part-time as a teacher and as a gardener. Following the German occupation of Holland in May 1940, the Weinbergs lead an itinerant existence, sometimes in hiding, and other times in the open. Because of their classification as "Haksharah," a group valued for its involvement for agriculture, they were among the last to be deported. While one daughter had died, and the other left with friends, Werner and Lisl Weinberg were finally moved to the Dutch camp Westerbok on Erev Rosh Hashonah, 1943. In January, they were moved to Bergen Belsen. Surviving a bout with typhus, following liberation, the Weinbergs survived to reclaim their daughter and emigrated to the United States in 1948. This was a defining experience for Werner Weinberg and was a recurring theme in several of his later nonfiction and fiction writings.

Werner Weinberg's teaching career often coincided with his educational aspirations. While education director at Congregation Adas Jeshurun in Louisville, Kentucky he earned an M.A. in English, Creative Writing and Linguistics. A similar job at Congregation Beth Abraham in Dayton, Ohio allowed Weinberg to begin his studies at Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion. Weinberg was also a recipient of the Jacob Ziskind Fellowship. After receiving his Ph.D. in 1961, he received an appointment to the HUC-JIR faculty, which he retained until his retirement in 1984.

Weinberg's interest in the Hebrew language- both orally and in transliteration did not confine itself to his courses at HUC-JIR. While he was a major figure in developing the Hebrew curriculum and defining its role in rabbinic training, he also worked with the American National Standards Institute to develop national standards in romanization. Weinberg was also very active in the National Association of Professors of Hebrew, spearheading the annual Hebrew Conference.

A prolific writer and lecturer, Weinberg published over 80 articles and six books including Self Portrait of a Survivor. Never published, but very important to him was a manuscript entitled Quarantine, which chronicled his Holocaust experience through a fictional narrative. Another brochure, entitled Tale of a Torah Scroll details the history of the Torah Scroll from his native Rheda, which he presented as a gift to HUC-JIR during their 1976 centennial celebrations.

Werner Weinberg died on 27 January 1997, at age 81. He married Lisl Halberstadt in December 1938, a fellow student at the Wuerzberg seminary and teacher in Hannover. They had two daughters, Hannah and Susanne.
